

Comin' Home Transitional Housing for Veterans

Comin' Home provides safe and affordable transitional housing and support services for Veterans experiencing homelessness in Pima County. Comin' Home has housing units conveniently located in central Tucson.

Comin' Home is a tight-knit community where men and women can maintain their independence while building friendships, gaining skills and accessing resources.

United States Military Veterans can live at Comin' Home for up to 24 months using their grant & per diem benefit.

A safe place to call home is often the foundation to a healthy life. Comin' Home provides more than a roof. With on-site support services, residents can strengthen their job skills, rebuild their finances, repair their credit, reunite with family and friends, and transition into permanent housing.

Our friendly and knowledgeable staff will help you find the tools to live independently.

“I didn't know where
I was going to go.
When I was accepted
here, a huge weight was lifted off me.”

More Than a Roof — A New Life.

Through coordination with community resources, Comin' Home will help you develop a plan to meet your goals. We provide:

- Case Management coordinated with the VA and other service providers.
- On-site substance abuse support groups address anger, stress, relationships, and depression.
- Educational and life skills workshops.
- Help with building job skills, finding employment and enrolling in school.
- Assistance with financial and health care benefits.
- Referrals to medical and behavioral health services.
- Help with finding permanent housing.

About Transitional Housing

Comin' Home is a sober transitional living community where Veterans live with one roommate in a comfortable, fully furnished two-bedroom unit. This is an independent living program, though staff are always accessible. To qualify, Veterans need to be currently homeless and living with a mental illness, in recovery from substance abuse, or have another disabling condition.

You're just a few steps away from having a roof over your head and a foundation for a healthy life.
